

THE ENLC: BY THE NUMBERS

Since 1905, the Nell Hodgson Woodruff School of Nursing has evolved from a small training program in a fifty-bed hospital to an internationally renowned school that enrolls more than one thousand students annually. The new Emory Nursing Learning Center (ENLC) will continue to advance the school's mission of educating visionary nursing leaders and scholars, while transforming nursing, health, and health care systems locally and across the globe. All this comes during a time of unparalleled change in the health care system that places an urgent call for the nursing profession to take on a greater role.
